

A little bit of inspiration

One-hundred-and-forty-four square feet. That's not a typo. We spend a lot of time talking about massive multi-stage projects. But sometimes its important to remember the little things. Like the two-hour install time for a project in a sensitive environment.

Eisenhower Elementary school was looking for a timber reading bench for their library. Then with a little bit of inspiration it became something more. They turned a vacant schoolyard into the home of a new pavilion. It certainly gives the students a place to sit and read. But it also gives them a chance to safely get some fresh air. To play. And explore. In the mind of the right grade-schooler this could be a barn where all their favorite animals live.

LOCATION

Davenport, Iowa

YEAR

2019

SQUARE FEET

144

CATEGORY

Education

HIGHLIGHTED SOLUTIONS

DIRTT Timber Frame

The bow of a pirate ship setting sail to find lost treasure. A satellite dish exploring the deepest reaches of space. The only limit is their imagination. We love that. Because that's the way we feel about DIRTT. With a bit of inspiration and the right materials, the only limit to designing the perfect space is imagination.